Brown draughtproofing strips fit between the door and frame to keep the cold air out and the heat in

Govanhill shop swaps cold for comfort

When the Swap Market opened on Victoria Road, Sibell, the manager, quickly realised the shop unit was difficult to keep warm.

South Seeds energy officer Casey Dickson visited the business to carry out a free energy audit, offering Sibell advice on low-cost, low-energy LED lighting and how to eliminate draughts.

Sibell managed some of the audit report's upgrades herself, but got a quote for South Seeds' energy-saving handyman service to fit draughtproofing strips around the windows and doors.

Sibell felt the cost was worth it and booked the job

I could immediately feel the difference. And the service was really good value

Handyman Iain fits the draughtproofing strips, above, which mean the doors and windows now keep in the heat in the evening so opening hours weren't disrupted.

The draughtproofing made the space much warmer, and meant Sibell could save money by turning down the expensive electric heating.

"Iain, the handyman, was fantastic, a really lovely guy. He arrived on time and had the job done very quickly," said Sibell, who has now booked the service to make more improvements.
